Academic dishonesty includes plagiarism, which involves submitting work in a course as if it were the students' own work. Plagiarism may involve the act of submitting work in which some or all of the phrasing, ideas, or line of reasoning are alleged to be the submitters' own, but in fact, were created by someone else. The most common forms of plagiarism consist of these practices:

- copying from someone else's' writing without proper acknowledgement
- paraphrasing someone else's' writing without proper acknowledgement
- using the ideas or line of reasoning original to someone else without proper acknowledgement
- submitting work in which someone else has made substantial editing improvements to the content and phrasing of the work of the submitter
- submitting work in one course that the submitter has already submitted in another course, without the approval of the person teaching the current course
- the work submitted or presented was done, in whole or in part, by an individual other than the student presenting the work
